UCD CLINTON INSTITUTE FOR AMERICAN STUDIES

STUDY ABROAD PROGRAMME

The Clinton Institute for American Studies was established at University College Dublin in 2003 with the support of the Irish government, in recognition of the contributions made by President Clinton and his administration to the Peace Process. The Institute promotes teaching and research on US history, culture and politics and on transatlantic relations.

UCD Clinton Institute Semester Abroad

The Clinton Institute Ireland, Semester Abroad is a Spring semester programme of modules tailored for US-based students who wish to gain an international perspective on their own country. The programme consists of several modules which examine America's global role and it provides students with an opportunity to closely study the perceptions and impacts of the US in another country.

Programme

Students on the programme will take 30 ECT credits, made up of six modules, five of which are compulsory and taught at the Institute. They are;

- America in 21st Century
- American Abroad

- The US and Northern Ireland
- Transatlantic Relations

In addition students can choose one of the following 5 credit modules:

The programme will include a number of social events during the course of the semester. All Clinton Institute Semester Abroad students are encouraged to participate in the events programme of the Institute, which includes research seminars, symposia and conferences - all of which can enrich the learning experience.

Assessment

CSI students undertake the same examinations as domestic students in accordance with University regulations. Increasingly, essay and class-based work forms a substantial component of the assessment process.
